INTRODUCTION

Sleep plays a vital role in good health and well being throughout our life. After adequate sleep our body is working to support healthy brain function and maintain our physical health. Sleep is an inseparable part of student health and life and is pivotal to learning practice as well as physical and mental health. Studies have suggested that insufficient sleep, increased frequency of short-term sleep, going to sleep late and getting up early affect the learning capacity and academic performance.

Studies have indicated that the quantity of sleep reported by individuals as delayed or inappropriate sleep, waking up to late, especially at weekends and day time sleepiness is associated with compromised academic performance in students. Reduced overnight sleep or altered sleep patterns has been associated with failure in academic performance. The smartphone and T.V. addiction causes health deterioration due to decreased involvement in physical activities like walking. Due to poor sleep students face problems like affect concentration, problem to remember, academic performance decreased, weakness, acidity, headache, mood swing, obesity, lazyness and anxiety.

Sleep can be affected by various disorders that cause changes in sleeping hours, which may lead to psychological disorders such as depression and negatively affect academic performance. Inadequate sleep decreases general alertness sleep disorders are composed of a group of diseases of increasing prevalence and with social health problem. Sleep habits and specific sleep behaviours have and influence on the academic success of students. The sleep pattern refers to the personal schedule of bedtime and wake- up time.

In this project we study sleep time, study time, problem faced due to poor sleep by student and academic performance of student. Here, we analyse the effect of poor sleep on health and academic performance.
